I am a Graphic Designer and my medium is the computer.

Being a Graphic Designer allows me to explore who I am as an artist.

Design is about making choices that reflect you as an artist and is really about showing who you are and what you are capable of as a designer.

As Pablo Picasso once said, "Every child is an artist. The problem is how to remain as artist once he grows up". As I have grown up, I have stuck to these words and have become an artist. I will always be a designer, and to myself, I will always speak through the art that I create.

Growing up, art has always been in my life. It allows me to express myself and my emotions through a drawing, painting or a piece of graphic design. It lets me connect with the viewer and make a statement or get a message across.

Designing is very relaxing but sometimes a little more stressful. It's a balance that I have learned throughout the years. When I am designing, I like to keep my work very clean and simple. As an artist, using bright colors and organic shapes are a way in which I am able to express myself that I normally may not be able to do. Whereas the use of the geometric shapes and the basic colors shows more of whom I am which is an introverted individual.

When I begin designing, each project starts out the same way. I start by drawing sketches of ideas for designs, but then turn to the computer to allow myself to transform the sketches into a complete design. This allows my work to flourish and grow along side of me growing as an artist. Creating art has always been something that is enjoyable and become a part of who I am as an individual. I will always have art in my life, and be doing some form of art as I continue to grow.

The one thing that I love about graphic design is that you can combine different mediums together. I love painting in watercolor because it allows me to design in a different manor other than graphic design.

Being a graphic designer photography has always appealed to me. Photography with simple compositions and content attracts me because it is easy to understand and it is attractive to the eye.

All of these mediums combined a wide range of colors and shapes ties in everything that I focus on within my design work and who I am as a designer.
